

APRIL 2025

IMPROVEMENT SCHOLARS NETWORK

2025 ISN MEMBERSHIP REPORT

The ISN Leadership Board and the ISN Hub staff have embarked on an ambitious agenda aimed at building the field of improvement research and continuous improvement in education. One project on our agenda has been to develop and maintain an ISN Membership Directory to connect members of this growing community of scholars and practitioners.

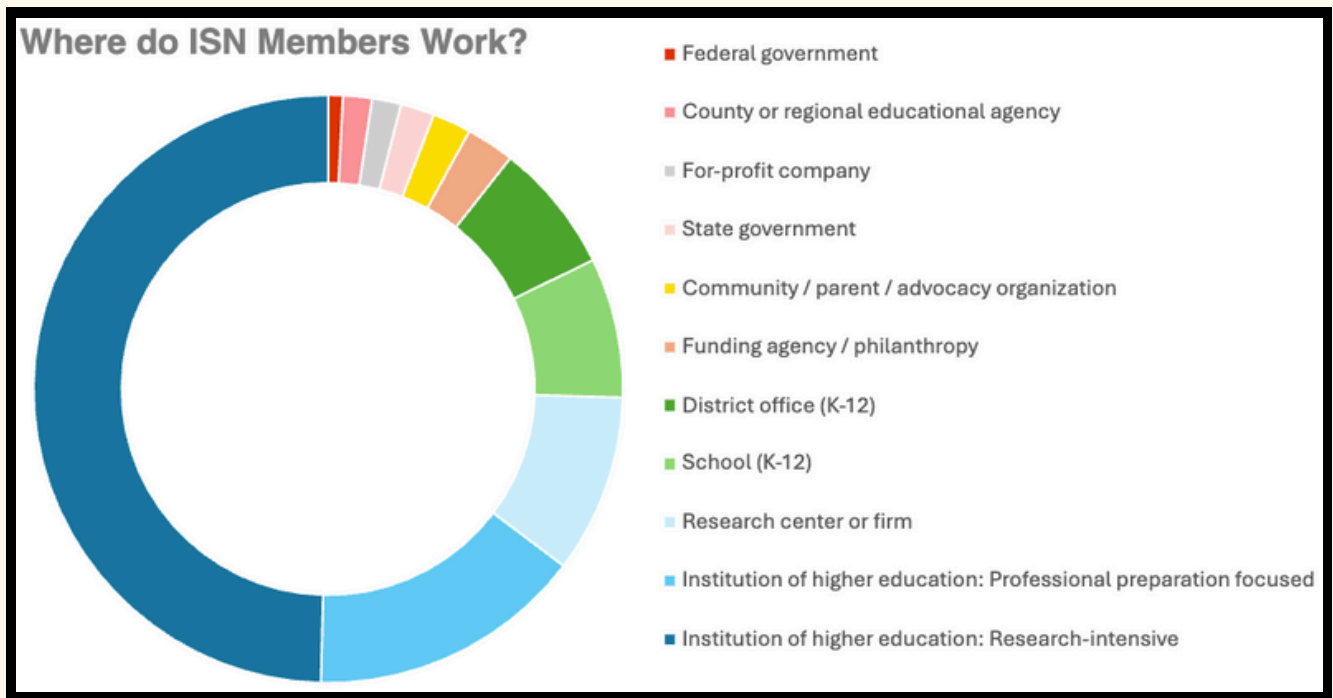

As part of these efforts, the Hub team aggregated information on the composition of the ISN to better understand who we are as a community. This report draws on data collected from 288 members of the ISN community. This data reflects ISN membership as of January 27th, 2025. Our membership is growing week over week. An aim of the ISN is to track changes in our membership over time, so we will update this report as our membership grows and shifts.

In the following report, we share four key findings about the ISN community: in what kinds of organizations ISN members work, what improvement approaches they use, in what organizational contexts they work, and where in the world they practice.

1

Where do ISN members work?

ISN membership includes individuals representing 169 unique organizations. Our members work in a variety of educational contexts, including institutions of higher education, research firms, governmental and non-governmental agencies, and K-12 educational settings.

2

What approaches to improvement research and continuous improvement do ISN members use?

ISN members use a range of improvement research and continuous improvement approaches in their work. Many members of the ISN community use multiple approaches in their work.

3

In what contexts do ISN members engage improvement research and continuous improvement methodologies?

ISN members engage improvement research and continuous improvement approaches in a range of organizational and network contexts, with some members of the ISN community practicing across multiple contexts.

4

Where are ISN members located?

ISN members are located across 16 countries, with most members located in the United States.

